Toki ch09 - Translation notes

 Tsumo Loss (page 26).

In 3-player mahjong, if a non-dealer wins a hand by tsumo, he/she will obtain less points than if winning the same hand by ron. The tsumo loss rule compensates that by making the losers pay a little bit more than they normally would.

For example, generally a non-dealer mangan is worth 8000 points if won by ron or 2000/4000 points if by won by tsumo. In 4-player mahjong, there are 3 opponents so 2x2000+4000=8000. In 3 player-mahjong however, there are only 2 opponents, so 2000 +4000=6000 < 8000. This can be compensated by making the losers pay 3000/5000.

In the match shown in this chapter, after winning the hand, President Yokeguchi asks the others if they want to play with or without the tsumo loss rule (since it's just a practice game, they didn't decide beforehand apparently).

Vague Rapide (page 33).

The original says "va-gu-ra-pi-do" written in katakana (indicating that it's a foreign word or words). It's not clear to anyone what Mekimeki means here. I've seen the theory that these are the French words "vague" (wave) and "rapide" (fast), which is what I used in the translation.

When "vague" and "rapide" are changed into kanji, they become 浪 and 速. If put together they form 浪速 (Naniwa), an old name for the city of Osaka. So "The Malefic Star of Vague Rapide" would mean "Osaka's Malefic Star". A very chuunibyou-like name for the mysterious hooded trio, probably. Since this manga is supposed to take place in or near Osaka, this makes pretty good sense, I think.
